This international engineering and consulting firm now claims Queretaro, Mexico as a new home.

Locally operated INP North America, Inc. has grown again, this time with its borders expanding to Queretaro, Mexico.

With offices already in the United States and Canada, INP North America is proud to announce that they have broken ground in the only outstanding country necessary to match their trademark name.

As an international engineering and consulting firm, gaining distinction in Mexico is an enormous triumph for INP.

INP Mexico officially opened on May 16, 2016, with Juan Pinto as the General Manager.

With an extensive background in Industrial Automation, Mr. Pinto serves as an exceptional fit for the market which INP plans to serve in Mexico.

The business operative for the Mexican branch is to provide local, on-site engineering and field services to our European customer base, as well as sites in the US that have a relation to industries within Mexico.

The automotive industry is booming in the region surrounding Querétaro; cities that can be included in this region of automotive innovation are San Luis Potosí, Salamanca and Celaya.

It is in the best interest of German manufacturers to migrate to this area of Mexico, as it serves to be a thriving environment for corporations to grow and prosper.

INP plans to lead the way towards business development in this region, and looks forward to using their European roots as a means for advancement.
